Engaging Beijing on Organ Pillaging during/after Leadership Transition

Hon. David Kilgour, J.D.

Koreana Hotel

Seoul

Permit me to congratulate South Korea’s son, Ban Ki-moon, on winning Seoul’s Peace Prize this week. It’s good to see his contributions to women’s and children’s rights, reducing poverty in developing countries, and democracy-building in the Middle East and North Africa, recognized.

China has also contributed much to the world. My respect for its people grew during several visits to the country; it was an honour to represent some Canadians of origin in China for many years in our Parliament. That said, fellow Canadian David Matas and I are here to urge your government, legislators, media and other citizens to join the international campaign to end the inhuman commerce in organs from a large community of peaceful Chinese citizens.

We’re both encouraged that “The Traffickers”, playing now in theatres across Korea, is bringing public attention to this new crime against humanity. The film was prompted by the tragedy of a Korean couple honeymooning in China. The bride disappeared: her body was later found with many organs missing. It is, however, government-sponsored organ trafficking across China that many of us have been attempting to stop for more than a decade.

The democratic world should be as actively engaged as feasible on human dignity issues during the leadership transition in Beijing. Democracy with Chinese features is probably closer than many now realize. The Chinese people should be encouraged to know that the values we seek to encourage in their new leaders are universal ones, including, the rule of law, dignity for all and a peaceful world.

Consider the case of Bo Xilai, whom too many democratic governments and business people naïvely courted for years. While governor of Liaoning Province from 2001-2004, Bo and his now-jailed police chief/Vice Mayor of Jinhzhou City, Wang Lijun, were among the most brutal persecutors of Falun Gong, imprisoning them in large numbers and permitting their organs to be taken and sold for profit for transplant surgery. They and others were rising stars in former president Jiang Zemin’s faction in the Party partly because of their zealous support for Jiang’s persecution of Falun Gong from mid-1999.
In 2004, Wang, a policeman by training, founded a research centre which carried out research on drugs for improving the process of human organ transplants by conducting several thousand organ transplant operations with unexplained organ sources. Premier Wen Jiabao was so disturbed by Wang’s conduct that his rhetorical question to Party members was leaked on March 14 of this year, “Without anaesthetic, the live harvesting of human organs and selling them for money—is this something that a human could do?” Wen used the lawsuits launched against Bo in 13 countries for his role in organ pillaging to have him removed as Commerce minister in 2007 and later to block his rise to the Standing Committee of the Party. Democrats around the world should be supporting reform-minded party members on this and a host of governance issues.
Wen Jiabao has spoken often about the need for democratic reforms and the rule of law in China. In recent days, he has denied the accusation that he allowed his family to amass a huge fortune. It is possible that the New York Times, which broke the story, was misled by Wen’s enemies in Beijing.

[See Addendum 1]

Falun Gong

Falun Gong is a discipline which seeks to improve body, mind and ethics. It contains features of traditional Chinese Qigong, Buddhism and Daoism (Taoism), combined with a set of gentle exercises. Its core principles are “truth, compassion and forbearance”. [See Addendum 2]
The party-state has repressed the Falun Gong movement brutally since July 1999. Rape, torture, beating-to-death, detention in forced labour camps, brainwashing—all became the lot of many Falun Gong across China. They responded with a non-violent defence of human dignity within China and in many other countries.

After 1980, the post-Mao Party withdrew funds from the health system across China, telling it to make up shortfalls from service charges to patients. Selling the organs of executed convicted persons became extra income for surgeons, prison guards, military and others. After 1999, tens of thousands of Falun Gong prisoners of conscience became a live organ bank for wealthy Chinese patients and ‘organ tourists’ from abroad.

Forced Labour Camps

David Matas and I visited about a dozen countries to interview Falun Gong practitioners sent to forced labour camps, [See Addendum 3] who later managed to leave the camps and China They were sent to camps after mid-1999 on only a police signature. The system was created in Stalin’s Russia and Hitler’s Third Reich and copied in the 1950s by Mao. The now well-documented treatment of this peaceful community across China should remind the world of the Nazi death camps for varied reasons. Bo Xilai and others in the Jiang faction clearly now want to conceal these activities.

41,500 Transplants

According to our research, detailed in our 2009 book Bloody Harvest, practitioners have been killed in the thousands since 2001 so that their organs could be trafficked to Chinese and foreign patients. For the period 2000 –2005 alone, we concluded that for 41,500 transplants done the only plausible explanation for sourcing was Falun Gong.

Our main conclusion was that there “continues today to be large-scale organ seizures from unwilling Falun Gong practitioners … Their vital organs, including kidneys, livers, corneas and hearts, were seized involuntarily for sale at high prices, sometimes to foreigners, who normally face long waits for voluntary donations of such organs in their home countries.”

[See Addendum 4]

International Initiatives

Have the efforts of many in China and around the world to stop these crimes against humanity made a difference? I’ll mention only a few of the international initiatives:

United Nations: In 2006 and again in 2007, U.N. special rapporteurs asked the Chinese government for an explanation of the allegation of organ harvesting from live Falun Gong. Beijing provided no substantive answer, simply denying the charges.

[See Addendum 5]
In a report submitted to the tenth Human Rights Council session in 2009, Prof. Manfred Nowak, Special Rapporteur on Torture, stressed that “New reports were received about harvesting of organs from death row prisoners and Falun Gong practitioners.”\(^1\) Independent experts of the U.N. Committee against Torture also addressed the issue of organ pillaging from Falun Gong\(^2\):

“(China) should immediately conduct or commission an independent investigation of the claims that some Falun Gong practitioners have been subjected to torture and used for organ transplants and take measures, as appropriate, to ensure that those responsible for such abuses are prosecuted and punished.”

European Parliament: In September 2006, the E.U. Parliament adopted a resolution condemning detention and torture of Falun Gong, and expressing concern over reports of organ pillaging. The issue was also raised by direction of the EU troika leadership through Finnish Foreign Minister Tuomioja, meeting that year with China's Foreign Minister.

United States: Earlier this month, 106 Members of Congress from both parties wrote to Secretary of State Clinton, urging her to release information on organ pillaging from Falun Gong practitioners and other religious/political prisoners, and seeking the release of any related information she might have, including details that Wang Lijun is believed to have transmitted during his brief sanctuary in a U.S. consulate in China in February. The letter also referred to a Sept. 12 Congressional hearing, where witnesses implicated Chinese hospitals and doctors in forced organ pillaging from prisoners, mostly of Falun Gong, but including Uyghurs, Tibetans and “House” Christians.

[See Addendum 6]

Taiwan: In 2007, Hou Sheng-mao, then Director of Taiwan’s Department of Health, reported requesting that Taiwanese doctors not recommend to patients travelling to mainland China for transplants.

Australia: In 2006, the Australian Health ministry ended training programs for Chinese doctors in organ transplant techniques at two of its hospitals, and banned joint research programs with China on organ transplantation.

China: The party-state today accepts in principle at least that sourcing organs from prisoners is improper. Deputy Health Minister Huang Jeifu said in 2009 that executed prisoners “are definitely not a proper source for organ transplants.”

\(^1\) http://www2.ohchr.org/english/bodies/hrcouncil/10session/reports.htm (document number: A/HRC/10/44/Add.5).

\(^2\) One report with the document number of CAT/C/CHN/CO/4 (full text available from http://www2.ohchr.org/english/bodies/cat/cats41.htm).
Unfortunately, the international initiatives have not yet ended trafficking in organs across China. Since we began, the number of convicted persons sentenced to death and then executed has decreased overall quite dramatically, but the number of transplants, after a slight decline, rose to earlier levels. Since the only other substantial source of organs for transplants in China is prisoners sentenced to death, a decrease of sourcing from that population means an increase in sourcing from Falun Gong.

Recommendations

For organs trafficked in China, Matas and I would encourage South Koreans to consider our recommendations, including:

Urging the party-state in China to cease the repression of Falun Gong; cease organ-pillaging from all prisoners; remove its military from the organ transplant business; establish and regulate a legitimate organ donor system; open all detention centres, including forced labour camps, for international investigation; and free all prisoners of conscience.

Implement the following until organ pillaging from all prisoners ceases: medical professionals in every country which respects human dignity should actively discourage their patients from going to China for transplant surgery; no government should issue visas to Chinese MDs for training in organ transplantation; MDs from outside China should not travel there to give training in transplant surgery; contributions submitted to medical journals about experience with transplants in China should be rejected; and pharmaceutical companies everywhere should be barred by their national governments from exporting to China any drugs used solely in transplant surgery.

South Korea’s parliament and government could enact measures to combat organ transplant commerce: exterritorial legislation, mandatory reporting of transplant tourism, health insurance systems not paying for transplant abroad, barring entry of those involved, etc.

Before closing, permit to touch on two related matters:

Falun Gong Refugees

Your government earlier returned ten Falun Gong practitioners from China, who had applied for refugee status here. [See Addendum 7] If your government now accepts that organ pillaging is being done to Falun Gong, or even that they are often arrested upon return, deportation would strongly appear to violate the Geneva Refugee Convention. To its credit, your government has not deported anyone for at least a year and seems unlikely to do so in future.

Shen Yun

There appear to have been continuous attempts by the embassy of China in Seoul since 2007 to block performances of traditional Chinese dancing, singing and music by Shen Yun across Korea. [See Addendum 8] I might add that Shen Yun now runs most successfully in more than 100 cities on five continents in large halls, such as the Kennedy Center in Washington and the government-owned National Arts Centre in Ottawa.

Conclusion

All democratic governments ought to enact effective safeguards to combat ongoing organ trafficking inside and from China. Now is opportune because the issue which sustains mass murder, the persecution of Falun Gong, appears to be a factor in the struggle for positions on the new Standing Committee of the Party. Korea could join all of us across the world urging the new leadership next month to end both organ pillaging and the persecution of Falun Gong.

People in and beyond China might now have some real impact on the ending of this hideous commerce, not only because it is necessary for tens of millions of Falun Gong practitioners and their families, who have been torn apart across China, but also because it is good for China and the international community as a whole. We all want a China that has the rule of law, human dignity and can enjoy democratic governance.

Thank you.

________________________________________________________________________

Addenda

Addendum 1

Addendum 2

In China, where the movement first emerged in 1992, it grew within seven years to 70-100 million practitioners by the government’s own estimate. Then Party head Jiang Zemin in 1999 reacted irrationally in 1999 at seeing citizens from all walks of life, including party members, engaging publicly in a form of exercise with more participants than his political party had members. The exercises could be done anytime, anywhere, singly or in groups, indoors or outdoors, which meant it was impossible to control.

Addendum 3

Practitioners told us of working in appalling conditions in camps for up to sixteen hours daily with no pay and little food, crowded sleeping conditions and torture. They made a range of export products as subcontractors to multinational companies. This is gross corporate irresponsibility and a violation of WTO rules; it calls for an effective response by all trading partners of China. Each should enact legislation which places an onus on all importers to prove goods were not made in effect by slaves.
The camps allow the Party to send anyone to them for up to three years with neither hearing nor appeal. One estimate of the number of the camps across China as of 2005 was 340, holding about 350,000 inmates. Other estimates are much larger. In 2007, a U.S. government report concluded that at least half of the inmates in the camps were Falun Gong. It is totalitarian governance and 'anything is permitted' economics that enable these practices to persist.

Addendum 4

Our revised report is accessible in 18 languages from www.david-kilgour.com

Addendum 5

The two joint letters sent by Special Rapporteur on Torture, Prof. Manfred Nowak, Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Religion, Ms. Asma Jahangir, and Special Rapporteur on Trafficking in Persons, Ms. Sigma Huda, are accessible from:

http://www2.ohchr.org/english/bodies/hrcouncil/7session/reports.htm (document number: A/HRC/7/3/Add.1) and from http://www2.ohchr.org/english/bodies/hrcouncil/7session/reports.htm (document number: A/HRC/7/10/Add.1).

Addendum 6

The full text of the letter is accessible at http://en.minghui.org/html/articles/2012/10/7/135751.html

Addendum 7

There is one practitioner who has been in custody here for over a year. He has been denied refugee status, but pressure from human rights organizations and other governments helped prevent his deportation. Amnesty International’s investigation of his case last year correctly caused embarrassment for some of your officials. Several other practitioners have since been granted refugee or other legal status, so that they are able to remain in Korea. Thus, there are some positive developments.

Addendum 8

The usual method, as elsewhere, is to threaten theatre owners or local governments with economic consequences. For example, in 2009, I’m told that the private foundation that owns the Universal Art Center in Seoul was ready to host Shen Yun, but received so many threats that the event was only held after going to court. In 2011, Busan’s city-owned hall was to host Shen Yun. Its mayor evidently attempted to cancel the show, but fortunately it proceeded after a court ruling and strong support from local residents and news organizations. The problem, however, persists.