

PROPOSALS TO UNITED KINGDOM PARLIAMENT TO END AN ONGOING CRIME AGAINST HUMANITY IN CHINA

Hon. David Kilgour, J.D.
Room Q, Portcullis House
Westminster
London
29 April 2013

This submission urges the U.K. Government and Parliament to lend your weight in the growing international campaign to end a crime against humanity ongoing since 2001 in China: the killing of tens of thousands of Falun Gong prisoners of conscience in order to traffic their vital organs to wealthy Chinese nationals and ‘organ tourists’ from abroad. I hope your government and legislators will choose to take action on this important international human dignity issue.

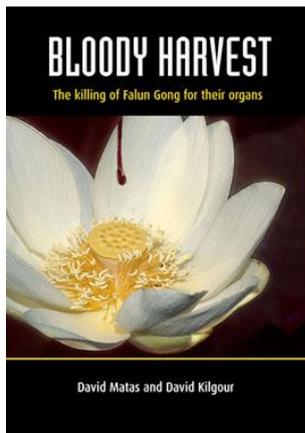

Only recently, assent was given to the national Parliament of Australia’s Crimes Legislation Amendment (people trafficking) Act of 2013, which deals as well with organ trafficking. It is a step in a better direction by a respected rule of law country. Details can be accessed at <http://www.comlaw.gov.au/Details/C2013A00006/Download>.

Your Daily Record newspaper recently (April 7) ran a news story about then Chinese surgeon Enver Tohti. It read in part:

“(Tohti)...says he's still haunted by an incident in 1995 which forced him to eventually flee China four years later. (He) was ordered to remove the liver and kidney of a shooting victim in 1995. He was shocked to find at least 10 prisoners had been shot in a field by a firing squad. Armed police waved the surgeon and his medical team over and directed them to a man lying unconscious on blood-soaked ground. Tohti said: ‘He’d been shot in the right-hand side of the chest but was still alive...I told my chief surgeon he wasn’t dead but he ordered me to remove the man’s liver and kidneys there and then – and to be quick about it. I was ordered not to give the man any anaesthetic.’”

China’s 5000-year-old civilization, including its historical stress on harmony, deserves the respect of the entire world. This talk, however, is about governance and violence committed by its party-state in place since 1949 on those deemed its opponents.

David Matas and I located 52 kinds of direct and circumstantial proof about this commerce occurring since 2001. One of them, for example, was the former wife of a surgeon in Sujiatun, who told us that he removed the corneas from about 2000 Falun Gong victims in the 2001-2003 period (see chapter 9 in Bloody Harvest). For the period 2000 –2005, Matas and I concluded that for 41,500 transplants the only plausible explanation for sourcing was Falun Gong. We arrived at this figure by deducting from the government figure of 60,000 transplantations over the six-year period, which seemed accurate, the best estimate available about executed convicts (18,550) for the same years.

The mayor conclusion of Bloody Harvest is that there “continues today to be large-scale organ seizures from unwilling Falun Gong (...) Their vital organs, including kidneys, livers, corneas and hearts, were seized involuntarily for sale at high prices, sometimes to foreigners, who normally face long waits for voluntary donations of such organs...”

Our revised report is accessible in 18 languages on the Internet (www.david-kilgour.com).

State Organs

In the 2012 book, State Organs, writer Ethan Guttman’s best estimate is that 65,000 Falun Gong were killed for their organs during the years 2000-2008, selected from about 1.2 million practitioners he judges were interned in China’s forced labour system (Laogai). A police signature is sufficient to send anyone to the camps for up to three years. Mark Mackinnon of Canada’s Globe and Mail put it recently, “No charges, no lawyers, no appeals”. In 2007, a U.S. government report estimated that at least half of the inmates in 340 camps were Falun Gong. Absolutist governance and 'anything is permitted' economics created the conditions for organ trafficking to occur and continue today.

Falun Gong (or Falun Dafa) is a practice of self-cultivation and meditation, which seeks to improve health and ethics, the latter by encouraging principles such as “truth, compassion and forbearance”, which also form part of other world faiths. It contains features of traditions, such as Buddhism, Taoism and Chinese Qi Gong, combined with a set of gentle exercises. Because it grew astonishingly rapidly in popularity from its inception in 1992, the Party saw it as a threat, labeled it a ‘cult’, and commenced persecution against its practitioners from mid-1999 until now.

After 1980, the post-Mao Party withdrew funds from the health system across China, requiring it to make up the shortfall from service charges to mostly uninsured patients. Selling the organs of executed convicts became a source of extra income for surgeons, the military and other participants. Falun Gong prisoners of conscience later became a vast live organ bank for wealthy Chinese patients and ‘organ tourists’ from abroad, who often preferred that the “donors” were Falun Gong, being healthy persons normally, rather than convicted prisoners.

Matas and I visited about a dozen countries to interview Falun Gong practitioners sent to China's forced labour camps, who later managed to leave both the camps and the country. Practitioners told us of working in appalling conditions in camps for up to sixteen hours daily with no pay and little food, crowded sleeping conditions and torture (A number of recent news reports in Lens magazine and other media inside China about the Masanjia camp echo what we were also told). They made a range of export products as subcontractors to multinational companies. This is gross corporate irresponsibility and a violation of WTO rules, calling for an effective response by all trading partners of China. Each government should ban forced labour exports by enacting legislation which places an onus on importers in each country to prove their goods are not made by forced labourers.

Constructive Engagement

The international community should engage as constructively as feasible with the new government in Beijing, while pressing it constantly to end organ pillaging forthwith and for those responsible to be brought to justice.

Selling services, goods and natural resources to virtually any country is in my view acceptable (subject to security considerations), but investing in ones without full reciprocity for foreign investors and governments without respect for their own citizens is inevitably problematic. No responsible government should permit the sale of any of its businesses to state-owned companies (SOEs) from anywhere.

Foreign Investment and Absence of Rule of Law

Much goes wrong for foreign investors in China. For example, McDonald's opened its first restaurant in Beijing a number of years ago under what it thought was a twenty-year lease. Two years later, it was told to get out because a large domestic developer wanted to build over its location. What hope of fair treatment is there for most foreigner investors if McDonald's is abused thus?

A Canadian family I knew invested their life savings and those of friends in a pharmaceutical firm not far from Beijing about a dozen years ago. The mayor of the adjacent city had run the business before it was privatized, but wanted it back. He evidently pulled enough levers under the table that the plant was soon padlocked. The Canadians lost every penny of their investment; the respective embassies in Ottawa and Beijing said they could do nothing to help.

Sino-Forest Inc. was delisted from the Toronto Stock Exchange last year; approximately 50 Chinese companies have been delisted by the SEC in the U.S. Investors and consumers alike in and outside China are fed up with toxic toys, poisonous food, theft of intellectual property and other business frauds.

Clive Ansley

If anyone in Australia or Canada thinks that a bilateral investor protection treaty will prevent similar problems, consider the experiences of Clive Ansley of Canada. He practised law in Shanghai for thirteen years and observes, "There is a ...saying amongst Chinese lawyers and judges who truly believe in the rule of law..." Those who hear the case do not make the judgment; those who make the judgement have not heard the case." Another factor which caused Ansley to leave China was an edict that went out to all judges across the country, telling them that foreigners were not to win in China's 'courts' in future.

The late Vaclav Havel was threatened that his country would lose exports to China if he invited the Dalai Lama to Prague. The visit took place and nothing appears to have been lost. When Prime Minister Harper stood up to Beijing after 2008, similar threats were made. Bombardier Inc announced one of its biggest contracts ever in China not long after our prime minister spoke about Canadian values in the world. In short, bluster aside, the Party in Beijing appears to respect those who stand up for universal values.

Dalai Lama and Aung San Suu Kyi

The late Vaclav Havel

International Initiatives re Organ Pillaging

United Nations

Since 2006, several UN Special Rapporteurs have asked China's government for an explanation of the serious allegation about organ pillaging from live Falun Gong practitioners. They pointed out to the government that a full explanation would disprove the allegations, but it has provided no meaningful answer, simply denying woodenly the charges.

The following are two conclusions drawn by the Rapporteurs:

“Organ harvesting has been inflicted on a large number of unwilling Falun Gong practitioners at a wide variety of locations for the purpose of making available organs for transplant operations. The practitioners were given injections to induce heart failure, and therefore were killed in the course of the organ harvesting operations or immediately thereafter.”

“It is reported that employees of several transplant centres have indicated that they have used organs from live Falun Gong practitioners for transplants... officials from several detention facilities have indicated that courts have been involved in the administering the use of organs from Falun Gong detainees.”

The Chinese party-state replied with a categorical denial. The rapporteurs, however, later reported: “New reports were received about harvesting of organs from death row prisoners and Falun Gong practitioners”¹ and “information received that Falun Gong practitioners have been extensively subjected to torture and ill-treatment in prisons and that some of them have been used for organ transplants.”

¹ <http://www2.ohchr.org/english/bodies/hrcouncil/10session/reports.htm> (document number: A/HRC/10/44/Add.5).

In 2008, the U.N. Committee against Torture recommended that Chinese authorities investigate and punish those responsible for forced organ pillaging from Falun Gong.

European Parliament

Hearing at European Parliament on pillaging, 29 Jan, 2013

In September 2006, The European Parliament conducted a hearing and adopted a resolution condemning the detention and torture of Falun Gong practitioners, and expressing concern over reports of organ harvesting; the issue was also raised by direction of the EU troika leadership through the Finnish Foreign Minister meeting bilaterally with China's Foreign Minister at the EU-China summit that year in Helsinki.

On December 1, 2009, the European Parliament Human Rights Subcommittee held hearings on organ transplant abuse in China. Its resolution of 19 May 2010² "Action plan on organ donation and transplantation (20092015)" states in part:

"Notes the report of David Matas and David Kilgour about the killing of members of Falun Gong for their organs, and asks the Commission to present a report on these allegations, along with other such cases, to the European Parliament and to the Council;"³

On December 6, 2012 organ pillaging in China was among the main topics in a hearing in European Parliament on Human Rights in China. David Matas testified.

Australia

In 2006, the Queensland health ministry ended training programs for Chinese doctors in organ transplant techniques at the Prince Charles and Princess Alexandra hospitals, as well as banning joint research programs with China on organ transplantation. In New South Wales, MP David Shoebridge has proposed that it be illegal for residents to receive trafficked organs (see www.david-kilgour.com).

² 2009/2104(INI)

³ Paragraph 39.

Taiwan

In 2007, Hou Sheng-mao, then Director of its Department of Health, reported requesting Taiwanese doctors not recommend to their patients to travel to China for transplants. The Taipei bar association recently passed a resolution, condemning 'organ tourism' in China.

Canada and Belgium

In 2006, Two Belgian senators introduced into the Belgium Parliament-a law which addresses organ transplant tourism. Former Canadian MP Boris Wrzesnewskij introduced into our House of Commons extraterritorial legislation banning "transplant tourism" in 2008. Both would penalize any transplant patient who receives an organ without consent of the donor where the patient knew or ought to have known of the absence of consent

France

Parliamentarian Valérie Boyer and other members of the National Assembly proposed a law in 2010 which sets out certificate and reporting requirements similar to Canada's proposed law. It would require every French resident who undergoes an organ transplant abroad to acquire within 30 days a certificate stating that organ was donated without payment. The recipient must provide the certificate to the French Biomedical Agency before returning to France.

Valérie Boyer

Dr. Jay Lavee

Israel in 2008 passed at the urging of Dr. Lavee and other transplantation specialists a law banning the sale and brokerage of organs and ending funding through the health insurance system of transplants in China for Israeli nationals. It also offered a number of interesting initiatives to encourage nationals to donate organs, including giving priority for to transplants to persons who signed donor cards. After the bill was enacted, 'organ tourism' by Israelis to China ceased immediately.

United States

In September 2006, Congress held a hearing on organ harvesting from Falun Gong. http://commdocs.house.gov/committees/intlrel/hfa30146.000/hfa30146_of.htm

US Congressional Committee in hearing

Rep. Chris Smith

On Oct. 3 2012, 106 Members of Congress wrote to then Secretary of State Clinton, urging her to release information on organ pillaging in China from Falun Gong practitioners and other religious and political prisoners, and for the release of any information it might have that former Chongqing deputy mayor Wang Lijun is believed to have provided during his brief sanctuary in a U.S. consulate in February. Wang and Bo Xilai, both now in prison, were directly involved in organ pillaging.

Wang (right)

Bo Xilai

The State Department finally acknowledged, albeit weakly, in its 2011 Human Rights Report, released in May 2012, that "Overseas and domestic media and advocacy groups continued to report instances of organ harvesting, particularly from Falun Gong practitioners and Uighurs."

<http://www.state.gov/j/drl/rls/hrrpt/humanrightsreport/index.htm#wrapper>

From June 2011, the online U.S. non-immigrant visa application, Form DS-160, requires the following information from the applicant: “Have you ever been directly involved in the coercive transplantation of human organs or bodily tissue?”

NGOs and Medical Organizations

Various NGOs and medical organizations have issued statements urging the investigation and measures to stop the forced organ pillaging from prisoners of conscience, particularly Falun Gong. Some examples:

- In 2007, the Transplantation Society introduced new policy on interactions with China, against using the organs from prisoners.
https://www.dafoh.org/TTS_policy_on_Interactions.php
- The policy of the WMA (World Medical Association) includes now a paragraph that organ donation from prisoners is not acceptable in countries where the death penalty is practiced. This is a new policy.
- The NGO Doctors Against Forced Organ Harvesting (DAFOH) seeks to promote ethical standards in medicine and to end forced organ pillaging across China. In 2012, DAFOH initiated several petitions in Europe, Australia and U.S. (including the so-called White-House-Petition) calling for an end of organ pillaging in China and further investigation through the UNHRC. Within 3 months, the petitions garnered 250,000+ signatures.

Prof. Maria Fiatarone Singh

Recent Individual initiatives

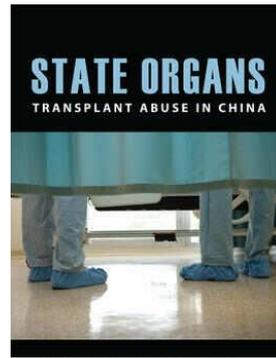

- In July 2012, Dr. Torsten Trey and David Matas published State Organs. The book is a collection of essays by leading medical professionals and other commentators which consolidates evidence of these abuses, discusses their ethical implications, and provides insight on how to combat these violations.
- On December 2, 2012, three medical doctors, Arthur Caplan, Alejandro Centurion and Jianchao Xu, initiated a petition calling upon the Obama administration to investigate and help stop forced organ harvesting from Falun Gong in China. The petition is posted within the “We the People” section of the White House website. The petition is available at: <http://wh.gov/5Jmn>.

Unfortunately, these and other initiatives have not yet ended the trafficking in organs from involuntary “donors” across China.

China

Former Vice Minister of Health HUANG Jiefu

The government of China now accepts that sourcing of organs from prisoners is improper. Former Deputy Health Minister Huang Jiefu in 2009 said that executed prisoners “are definitely not a proper source for organ transplants.” In 2005, Huang admitted that over 95% of the organs transplanted in China came from executed prisoners. China had denied using prisoners’ organs prior to this admission.

In 2006, a World Medical Association resolution demanded that China stop using prisoners as organ donors; in 2007, the Chinese Medical Association agreed to do so. In 2010 at a transplant conference in Madrid, Huang stated that between 1997 and 2008 China had performed more than 100,000 transplantations, with over 90% of the organs being from executed prisoners. He has since admitted to doing about 100 liver transplants yearly for a long period and has thus presumably has been an active participant in pillaging organs from Falun Gong prisoners of conscience.

In February of 2012, Huang again stated that the practice of organ harvesting from prisoners continues in China today, but that the government wants to phase it out by 2015 and build up a national donation scheme. This will be very difficult to achieve because many Chinese are culturally unwilling to donate their organs.

Before the party-state abolishes organ harvesting from executed prisoners, tens of thousands more will be killed for their organs. Since Matas and I began our voluntary work, the number of convicted persons sentenced to death and then executed has decreased, but the number of transplants, after a slight decline, rose to earlier levels. Since the only other substantial sources of organs for transplants in China, apart from Falun Gong, are prisoners sentenced to death, a decrease of sourcing from that population means an increase in sourcing from Falun Gong.

In the past, the death penalty was administered by gunshot, but lethal injection is now the most common practice because organs are preserved. Most executions in China take place in mobile buses, which are often parked next to hospitals.

Corporate Social Responsibility

Some pharmaceutical companies, such as Novartis and Pfizer, have voluntarily pulled away from trials of anti-rejection drugs in China because of ethical concerns. There is, however, need for binding national regulation. Arne Schwarz in State Organs and David Matas in a speech detailed a wide range of trials of anti-rejection drugs done in China. Some were conducted in hospitals from which our telephone investigators obtained admissions that they were selling organs of Falun Gong.

Recommendations

Matas and I would encourage the U.K. government and Parliament to consider our recommendations, including, urging the party-state in China to:

- cease the repression of Falun Gong;
- cease organ-pillaging from all prisoners;
- remove its military from the organ transplant business;
- establish and regulate a legitimate organ donor system;
- open all detention centres, including forced labour camps, for international investigation; and
- free Gao Zhisheng and many other prisoners of conscience.

Implement the following measures until organ pillaging from prisoners ceases:

- MDs from outside China should not travel there to give training in transplant surgery;
- contributions submitted to medical journals about experience with transplants in China should be rejected; and
- pharmaceutical companies everywhere should be barred by their national governments from exporting to China any drugs used solely in transplant surgery.

Conclusion

The UK and other responsible parliaments could enact measures to combat international organ transplant abuses: extraterritorial legislation, mandatory reporting of transplant tourism, health insurance systems not paying for transplant abroad, barring entry of those involved in trafficking organs.

To those who in effect excuse what is happening in China today, alleging that only a small number of Britons are still going there for organ transplants, I ask, would you say the same if any fellow citizens were going to Pol Pot's killing fields in Cambodia for organs a generation ago?

Many of us in and beyond China ought now to seek greater impact on the future of this grave matter, not only because it is necessary for tens of millions of Chinese Falun Gong practitioners and their families, who have been torn apart across China, but also because it is good for China and the international community as a whole. We all want a China that enjoys the rule of law, dignity for all and democratic governance.

Thank you.